One of them, a girl eighteen years of age, had been drinking too much "Dago red" and consequently was in the crying stage of drunkenness. Deputy Sheriff Rose listened to the story and, after giving the girl some good advice, sent her home in a better state of mind.

Then shortly afterwards Tripp appeared with the second would-be suicide. His name was Silva, and he was a youth-only seventeen years The boy had been allowed go home once before, and had at once seized the opportunity to smast down a door leading into his parents' house. He was lectured by the deputy, but not much impression was made on him. It was decided to send him up before Judge Whitney, and the probabilities are that he will be sent to the Reform School
